Career Guidance Webinar -Personality Development and Interview Tips

Date: 14/01/2022

Time: 11:30 AM

Resource Person: Mr. Santosh M,
Team Lead, MPhasis,
Bangalore.

Participants: 78 students (3rd year BCA, BSc)

Objective of the program: Job interviews don't have to be dry and boring. In fact, they shouldn't be. It's important to act professionally, of course, but it's also important to show your personality to the interviewer. However, you don't want to go overboard and overwhelm the hiring manager—this isn't a party or family gathering. Read on to learn how to show your personality at a job interview.

Employers want to know that you are qualified for a position, but they also want to know how well you'll fit in with the company culture. The only way to assess this is to get a sense of your personality. The session was represented by Mr. Mr. Santosh M, Team Lead, MPhasis, Bangalore.

How important is personality? An Accountemps Survey reported that 79% of chief financial officers (CFOs) interviewed said an employee's sense of humor is important for fitting into company culture. That said, there's a fine line between being engaging, amusing, and overdoing it. What's important is to show the interviewer that you're personable and easy to get along with. Companies don't like having to manage difficult employees, so if you can show that you've got the right personality it can help you get hired
